Information About Content Moderation

Tools used for content moderation

trivago wants to be the obvious choice when travelers are searching for a hotel, and therefore, trivago has established internal procedures to uphold a safe environment for our users in compliance with the law and our Terms of Use.

We have implemented a channel for users to be able to submit a request for taking down illegal content through a form available in 19 languages. This channel is easily accessible through trivago's Help Center, where users can submit a request on the basis of DSA, or contest a decision made by trivago in that regard. As soon as a user submits a request, they are immediately notified of reception by an automated message with a confirmation of receipt. These requests arrive to our legal team, which promptly reviews them, takes action and contacts the user if needed. Whether a request accepted or rejected, the user is duly notified and informed.

It is important to highlight that users sometimes use the DSA form channel to submit User Support tasks (e.g., questions on bookings, inquiries about properties, etc.), which are unrelated to DSA. Users also use the internal complaint handling system when there had not been a decision made by trivago on content moderation, which is also unrelated to DSA. The legal team redirects these to the User Support Team, which takes care of the request. These cases are mentioned in this report for full transparency (see footnotes 1 and 4), but not considered DSA matters.

Human resources dedicated to content moderation trivago is a globally recognized accommodation search platform that connects travelers with a vast range of lodging options by aggregating offers from various booking sites and travel providers. trivago simplifies the accommodation search process by enabling users to compare prices, amenities, and availability across multiple providers. That said, the day-to-day implications of trivago within content moderation are limited in practice, given there is no direct interaction with end user-generated content through our website. Nevertheless, we maintain designated members of our legal team who are in charge of any DSA related request or task.

- 1 Senior Lead
- 1 Legal Counsel
- 1 Contract Manager

All mentioned members hold at least a master's degree and have experience in the legal field. Additionally, two of the mentioned members have received training on the Digital Services Act, provided by a renowned university in Europe.

Final Insights

As per the information gathered in this report, trivago remains committed to transparency and accountability in content moderation. Our efforts align with the DSA's requirements, ensuring a safe and legally compliant platform for all users and partners. We remain committed to continuously refining our moderation processes to enhance trust and security across our platform.
